view; and choice examples of hooked rugs made by the new method will be displayed. All who are interested in hooked rugs are invited to attend and to bring their own rugs, if they wish, for suggestions from experts.

Admission to the Hooking Bee, an all-day affair which will be held in open tents on the grounds of the First Presbyterian Church, Alden St., is free and nothing except food will be sold. Mrs. Carolyn A. Collett, teacher of the modern rug hooking method to more than 350 Adult Education students, and sponsor of the Hooking Bee, emphasizes that the Bee "is not a commercialized project, but an attempt to assist women who are interested in producing better results."

The Hooking Bee will be the 2nd in Cherry Valley presented at Mrs. Collett's direction. The first, held on a weekday in 1954, attracted a thousand hooked rug makers and teachers from every county in the State. The Cherry Valley Chamber of Commerce reports that special arrangements are being made by restaurants and women's organizations to assure ample food for all who attend.
